

About the Authors

Carol Collier Kuhlthau is Professor Emerita of Library and Information Science at Rutgers University where she directed the graduate program in school librarianship that has been rated number one in the country by U.S. News and World Report. Known for her groundbreaking research on the Information Search Process of students, she has authored five books including Seeking Meaning and Teaching the Library Research Process and over sixty articles. She is a frequent presenter on information literacy and learning through the research process in the U.S. and abroad.

Leslie Maniotes is a National Board Certified Teacher who recently completed a Ph.D. in instructional curriculum in the content areas at the University of Colorado. She is a K-12 literacy specialist with Reading Recovery Certification and a M.Ed. in reading. With eleven years of classroom experience, she has led workshops on teacher advancement training and taught undergraduate and graduate courses in the School of Education at the University of Colorado.

Ann Caspari is a specialist in museum education with a master's degree in teaching from George Washington University. She has extensive background as a museum educator at the National Building Museum, Calvert Marine Museum in Maryland, Paul Revere House, Newport Historical Society, and Smithsonian Early Enrichment Center. Currently she is the Museum Educator for Early Childhood Program at the Smithsonian Air and Space Museum. She frequently conducts workshops for teachers on the use of museum objects to enhance the curriculum.